

Referencing methods

Mike Howarth

The key to referencing

You are expected to provide evidence for the statements you make in your writing whatever the subject. You are being taught to write and think clearly.

A) You reference the author year and page in the text and

B) Reference the book, magazine, website in full according to a strict layout style called Harvard citation style in a reference section at the end of the essay or paper.

Referencing methods

Quoting sections of source text

Typical student statement:

The latest information about web use is that most homeowners are accessing supermarket sites.

(own opinion? copied? No)

Academic method:

Six of the eight main supermarket chains now have home deliveries linked to web site ordering systems.
(Howarth, 2001, p.34)

(informed, evidence based, can be checked Yes!)

One and half lines, no speech marks, no italics, no more than three or four sentences.

Indented, single line spacing.

Method B = evidencing source with author as subject of sentence.

---

Howarth (2001) considers online supermarket ordering is replacing supermarket visits (p.34).

---

Method C = quoting a few words of author

NB: single quotemarks

Online buying is taking over supermarket visits, 'Six of the eight main supermarkets now have home deliveries linked to web site ordering systems' (Howarth, 2001, p.34).

Bibliography

Put the full book details of your sources in the reference (also called bibliography) section at the end of the report i.e.

Howarth, M. (1980) On-line ordering in Tesco Magazine, 5, October, pp.30-38. ( the page numbers of the whole document)

See the section on Bibliography Harvard citation styles for full information

Styles for different sources

- The styles have to be followed meticulously. No deviation from full stops, italics spacing styles will be tolerated.
  - See following slide examples.
- Web site references are particularly cause for concern, especially for those who think copying and pasting is a natural right. (which it is not = plagiarism = failure or suspension).
  - So pay special attention to the website referencing methods and glow with self-rightousness.
